> Reshuffle Hinted Reports from Tripoli last week indicated that a government reshuffle was imminent in the 13man cabinet which Col. Qadhafi headed. It was not clear what prompted his giving up the oremicrship.

Differences of opinion were reported to exist between Col. Qadhafi and Maj. Jalloud and strengthened when Col. Qadhafi dropped Maj. Jalloud from the deputy premiership in August,

Maj. Jalloud was a close as-sociate of Col. Qadhafi in the coup that overthrew the monarchy in 1969. He has made a reputation for himself in Europe as a tough-minded negotiator, handling Libya's foreign affairs, including of and arms deals. He also helped improve relations with the Soviet Union during a visit to Moscow in February. Maj. Jalloud was responsible for the conclusion of the Mirage jet deal with France and negotiations with Britain and the United States that ended in the withdrawal of both powers from their bases in Libya,

He was also at the head of Libyan Army forces that occupied Tripoli at the start of the revolution in September, 1969.

Jackson Spearheads Attack on TV Program

Rivals See Disaster in McGovern Candidacy

By Leroy F. Aarons MIAMI BEACH, July 10 (WP)_

Four of Sen. George McGov-ern's rivals for the presidential nomination warned on national television yesterday that his nom-ination could drag the Democrat-ic party to disastrous defeat in

The attacks, which ranged from the polite, velled thrust of Sen. Rubert H. Humphrey to the hard-talking accusations of Sen. Henry Jackson, came on a special two-bour Meet the Press program on the eve of the Democratic National Convention The format-separate 30-minute appearances by each of five candidates did not allow for rebuttals. But Sen. McGovern, who was the first to be questioned by a panel of five newsmen, seemed to anticipate what was to come. He said that his candidacy would represent a "coalition of change," speaking for people who "identify the so-called centrist candidates as candidates who stand straddling the status quo." "I'm not where I am as a serious candidate for the presidency because I have a narrow hase . . I believe I have the best and broadest grass-roots organization ever built in American politics," be said.

The strongest broadside came from Sen. Jackson, who said that "professional politicians and just ordinary Democrats" are convinced Sen. McGovern could not defeat President Nixon. Even more serious, he said, is that a McGovern candidacy is "going to bring the ticket down." "Whenever three Democrats get together . . they are talking about losing the House, the Senate . . Wherever you get to-gether with a group here at the convention they're all scared to death," he said. "Labor, the majority of the leadership, certainly will not endorse him. trouble in the Jewish commitnity.... When we have other basic elements in what has al-ways been a winning Democratic coalition raising Cain, I think we've got problems."

Sen. Jackson's position was echoed with less intensity by Mrs. Chisholm, who said. "There is no doubt in my mind, as I listen to my colleagues in the House, that they are very concerned with respect to their local elections. ... Now, if you don't want to pay any attention to that, you can sweep it under the rug [but] I know there is deep concern, very, very deep con-

Sen. Muskie, who was more conciliatory, nonetheless conceded that the fear of a McGovern "dragdown" effect was "very deeply held and very widespread." He added that Sen. McGovern had originally "created an in P pression that he is outside the center of the mainstream of the party," but had begun to corre

Then, as the crowd began to disperse, several witnesses said that shots were fired toward the soldiers from snipers in houses. The soldiers returned the fireand the truce collapsed.

Mr. O'Connell said today that the Provisionals' decision was unanimous to end the cease-fire. "It was the only logical deci-

"We have no option but to resume offensive operations. Again our people have become targets for British aggression."

The TRA's violent response was immediate, and continued throughout the day. British troops claimed to have hit at least seven gunnen in Belfast today in a prolonged battle in the Springfield Road and Ardoyne

In Geneva, Mr. Waldheim, asked tonight whether the trip to New York next month meant that Mr. Jarring was reviving his peace mission, said: "It is revived but within the framework of what is possible."

"The situation is not easy. There are many difficulties and nobody can see how things will develop. The situation is not favorable at the moment but we must try our best."

A UN spokesman said; "After a comprehensive discussion it was decided that Ambassador Jarring would return to New York early in August for about two weeks in order to continue his consultations with the secretary-general and the parties,"

Mr. Jarring, who is Sweden's ambassador in Moscow, was last in New York early in May to survey prospects of resuming his long-stalled peacemaking effort. But after four days of talks with the secretary-general, Egyptian Ambassador Esmat Abdel Megind and Israeli Ambassador Yosef Tekoah, he concluded that there was no basis then for reactivating the mission entrusted to him under a November, 1967. SAN CLEMENTE, Call. July 10 (NYT).—President Nixon "doesn't plan to lose any sleep this week over the Democrats."

That's the word from the White House press secretary. Ron Ziegler, who said that Mr. Nixon had told him that he planned to watch part of the Democratic convention on television "as time permits" but that he wasn't going to sit up late doing it.

"He said he plans to go to bed at the usual time," which can be anywhere between 10:30 and midnight when be is working and resting at the Western White House, according to Mr. Ziegler.

Kennedy Repeats He Won't Accept Vice-Presidential Bid

HYANNIS PORT, Mass., July 10 (AP).—Sen. Edward M. Kennedy has reiterated his vow that he will not accept the vice-presidential nomination.

"I owe it to my family... I owe it to Joan [his wife], the children, my mother and my sisters," he said in an interview with the Boston Globe. There is no way I will take the vice-presidential nomination. There is no way I will do it." n. Kennedy is spending convention week here at the family compound, sailing his newly acquired 54-fcot sallboat. He said his administrative assistant, Edward Martin, would be at the convention in Miami Beach "to dampen things down in case someone should try to push me into the vice-presidential nomina-

He also repeated his position that ha has no desire to run for president this year.

Sen. Kennedy said his concern for members of his family is the major reason for his "absolute and final" rejection of any draft attempt. "I have made this very clear to Sen. McGovern."

"I am not worried from a personal point of view," the senator said. He said there were other reasons why he would not accept the vice-presidential nomination on the Democratic ticket.

"Basically, there would be more of a problem for me if I were to take the aecond place," Sen. Kennedy said. "I am close to McGovern in philosophy of government, but I feel that I could achieve more for the nation as an independent voice in the Senate than by serving four or eight years echoing whatever the President happened to be saying. "Besides, I am not cut ont that way. I have to be independent. Vice-President, you cannot, for example, move in on the health issue or other equally important issues with the same etfeet as you can as senator.

"Should McGovern win nomination and be elected in November, I will be in a much more effective position to aid his administration in the common goal. I have to be active. I have to be my own man. For me at this stage of my political career, the vice-presidency is not the answer.

Democrats Raise $4.4 Million In 19-Hour Telethon Appeal

MIAMI BEACH, July 10 (AP). The Democratic party signed off its 19-hour money-raising telethon last night with a report of a pledged total of $4.461,755. Spokesmen said that the final figure probably would top $5

Most of the money will be applied against the $9.3-million deht the party has owed since the 1968 campaign.

Telephones remained open late into the night to accommodate contributors who at first were unable to get through the jammed

Robert Strauss, Democratic party treasurer, said today that "the telethon attracted more than one-half million donors."

5100,000 Deficit Seen

MIAMI BEACH, July 10 (NYT). -Top party financial officials were urging their aides to help in a last-minute scramble for c. h to meet the estimated $100,000 deficit of their $2-million extrava-

When someone calls and says he has his son here with him and can the boy get into the convention hall," a weary Democratic official said, "We say, "Sam, we're short of money—we need your help.' We're selling boxes. we're selling pages—we'd sell the podium if we could. I think we're working it out."

The quadrennial presidential nominating sessions of both parties—the Republicans' are due here on Aug. 21 for theirs—will cost them a total of at least $3.8 million for the two-party run of eight days.

As usual the Republicans have the $1.8 million they will need for theirs in hand or in sight. They began with a $185,000 carryover from the 1868 convention. And, according to Richard L. Herman, the 52-year-old Omaha, Neb., truck line owner and Republican national committeeman who is chairman of the Arrangements Committee, there probably will be another surplus this year for the next convention.

The Democratic National Committee which is still burdened with debt, despite the telethon, is "on the brink of an historic first," as one official put it. "We are going to have a convention that ends up maybe only $35,000 or $50.000 in the red—if we are lucky."

More than luck is holding the deht-prone Democrats in check. Because the telephone company-American Telephone & Telegraph -hotels, printers, car rental agencies and others were left with such a stack of long-term, unpaid bills after the Chicago convention four years ago, purveyors of goods and supplies of service here now are demanding and getting advance payments, deposits and funds held in escrow. The Democrats' cash advance to Southern Bell, the AT&T subsidiary here, is shout $77,000 so far, as required by new regulations of the Pederal Communications Commission governing the extension of campaign credit. "I don't believe I've ever work-

The treasurer's concerns here range from substantial projects—the $1-million meome from sales of full-page corporato ads in the Democrats' 250-page, slickpaper convention program — to what Mr. Strauss obviously regards as the petty details satisfying small creditors.

Appealing directly to "my brothers and sisters," she made a highly emotional plea for votes on the first hallot, or for delegates to remain uncommitted. She attacked whitecontrolled power brokers who the said were trying to "deliver" the black vote.

"All the candidates need our votes to get across the top," she declared. She said they should not get those votes until the blacks find out "concretely" what these candidates are going to do

Fire Base Shelled

In four and a half hours this morning North Vietnamese tillery poured about 100 shells into South Vietnamese positions a mile southeast of Firebase Checkmate.

During the last week, Firebase Checkmate has changed hands three times, and is now controlled by the Communists. It is part of the defensive chain of positions ranged generally southwest of Hué.

Low cloud cover in the Hué area in the last few days has prevented effective support by tactical fighter-bombers. But B-52 heavy-bomber raids and long-range shelling by ships of the U.S. Seventh Fleet have helped make up for the bad weather. Fighting in most other sectors of South Vietnam remained essentially unchanged. Communist shells continued to pour into the provincial capital of An Loc. 60 miles porto of Salgon, and a beavy-caliber shell killed four U.S. Army men visiting the area yesterday, including Brig. The two ministers gave their ideas on what should be discussed at the proposed European security conference, where and when it should be held and what procedure should be adonted.

Mr. Harmel did not elaborate, apart from saying that Mr. Gromyko had stated the views he had expected to hear.

Mr. Harmel said that his Soviet colleague had made it clear that the Soviet Union was ready to discuss mutual force reductions in Europe, the so-called MRFR issue.

But the Soviet view was that this was a problem of a highly technical nature, which should be dealt with separately from the European security conference, Mr. Harmel added. Multilateral preparations for the Soviet-proposed conference could start late this year in Helsinki. Belgium feels that force reductions should have a place in the conference when it finally takes place, even if it provides only a declaration of principle.

Mr. Harmel said that the Common Market had not been discussed in today's meeting but he did not rule out discussion of the

The date set for elections is March 25 and in the nine months that remain Gen. Lanusse has called on the leaders of the parties, including the Justicialist followers of Mr. Peron, to discuss with the armed forces "the minimum conditions that will assure future government stability." Since the Peronist movement is regarded as the largest political force in this country of 23 million people, Gen. Lamusse has been trying to draw Mr. Peron into an agreement that would assure the armed forces against reprisals and give minority parties an effective voice in the future gov-

The Peron tactics have increasingly angered the armed forces and Gen. Lamusse, who is being criticized for "negotiating" with Mr. Peron.

Eclipse of Sun Is Viewed Across North America

NEW YORK, July 10 (UPI)-The shadow of the moon fell on the earth in a total eclipse, seen as a swiftly moving arc of dark-ness traveling from the tip of Siberia across northern Canada to the North Atlantic.

Total darkness occurred along a 113-mile-wide strip of the earth and a partial eclipse was visible in much of the rest of the world, including the United States, where the blackout ranged from 14 percent in San Francisco to 90 percent in Boston.

Scientists used a variety of sophisticated instruments—including rockets carrying electronic observation gear—to track the eclipse from land, sea and air.

The eclipse began at sunrise (1829 GMT) near Sakhalin Island north of Japan and traveled eastward across the Sea of Okhotsk and the peninsula of Kamchatka in eastern Siberia. From there it went across the Bering Strait, northern Alaska and Canada, fading ont at 2103 GMT in the North

The Truce Ends

It may be questioned whether the twothe Irish Republican Army did more good than harm. True, Ulster began to breathe again, for a little while, but the bittereness remained. None of the problems had been solved, or even approached. And in the meanwhile the Protestant opposition had recrystallized, organized, and prepared to take up arms. Northern Iteland seems closer to full-scale civil'war today than when the IRA grudgingly introduced the truce with a final splurge of killing.

Such a war may yet be averted. The Catholic opposition to the terror, which was the main reason why the IRA had to stop it for a while, surely has not evaporated. And the Protestant majority, however much they seem to fear being left as a minority in a united Ireland, can hardly want their own men to take up the moral burden that has been assumed by the Catholic extremists.

But the basic problem remains explosive. The Protestants want the Stormont government returned to power; the Catholics-most of them, in all probability—want a single Ireland: extremists speak and act for both sides without bothering to take a headcount. And the British are in the middle. facing those who are too loyal and too disloyal to the existing structure of Northern Ireland.

The most obscene aspect of the fighting week cease-fire by the Provisional wing of in Ulster is that it is done under religious labels. No one seriously believes that a resident of Portadown will shoot down one from Bogside because of a quarrel over transubstantiation—he probably couldn't even define the term. In fact, both sides are at some pains to point out that they are not anti-Catholic, not anti-Protestant. But both object so strenuously to what Catholics, or Protestants, stand for, politically and economically, that they are willing to kill or to die for the difference.

> One need not be too surprised at that; in Pakistan, a score of lives have been snuffed out in rioting over whether Urdu is to share with Sindhi as the official language of Sind Province. And many more than that die every day in Indochina over matters that may be more complex, more fundamental, but which could assuredly be eettled by reasonable men.

> But if surprise that violent death can become a way of life among sllegedly human beings is not called for, the assertion of rationality is emphatically demanded, in Ulster and elsewhere. The gun and the bomb do not reason; those who wield them must do so. Whatever remains of moderation in Northern Ireland must make itself felt, strenuously and effectively, before worse

Isn't It Egypt's Turn?

Yemen has become the first Arab League member to resume formal diplomatic relations with the United States since the Six Day war. Yemen being the small, poor, strife-plagued country it is, of no particular "strategic" import with the Suez Canal closed, the step is no coup for the United States. No doubt, however, it looms in larger dimensions for Yemen, which presumably welcomes the extra political propping against neighboring South Yemen, and the extra economic support, which for it the step portends. A symbolic measure of balance is being restored to a part of the world which had seemed to be tipping against American interests and toward Soviet Interests. If only psychologically, it is good to see an American ambassador headed back to San'a.

The most interesting aspect of this development, however, is its evidence of the increased irrelevance of the Arab-Israeli dispute to those Arab countries not directly involved in it. Just as the Soviet Union and the United States have determined not to let their differences in the Mideast spoil their relations in other spheres, so a trend is gathering in what is somewhat misleadingly called the "Arab world" to look at relations with the United States in terms of strictly local interests. The Saudis and other Persian Gulf oil states have never let the Arab-Israeli dispute interfere more than casually with their normal dealings with the United States. The Algerians are counting heavily, and increasingly, on economic ties. No one would be surprised if the Sudan. another country which has tried and found wanting reliance on Moscow and Cairo, were soon to resume relations with Washington.

Aside from Libya, a special case, Egypt remains the single major Arab country which has been narrowing rather than broadening its links with the United States. Recently it cut its diplomatic mission in Washington, and the American mission in Cairo, in half. The reason, of course, is its failure to get the United States to arrange a Mideast settlement on Egyptian terms. Now the Egyptians are hopping mad at Yemen, the country Nasser sought at tremendous cost, and with tremendous loss, to subjugate; he called it "My Vietnam." One can understand Cairo's ire. Its diplomatic strategy has been to "isolate" Israel and to penalize the United States for supporting. Israel, But moves like Yemen's and, if it comes, the Sudan's suggest that it is Egypt which is being isolated and penalized.

Almost everywhere, countries long separated from each other are making contact, widening ties and starting to talk. The United States and Yemen, the United States and China, India and Pakistan, North Korea and South Korea. In respect both to the United States and Israel. Isn't it Egypt's Whose Democrats?

Indicatione are that the Democratic couvention in Miami Beach will be one of the most bitter within living memory. After several vicissitudee the number of votes pledged to Seuator McGovern, the frontrunner who came up from hehind, is still uncertain. Britain and Monetary Union Britain, through Mr. Barber and Mr. Heath, has constantly said that it supports monetary union. At the same time, it should now point out that making a crisis of every occasion when a European parity gets out of line, which they all inevitably will from time to time, will be the best way of sinking monetary union and with it the farm policy. The Ten should formally incorporate into (a joint float) the idea that when one or more curreneles get patently out of line they should, as eterling did a fortnight ago, float out of the (agreement) for a limited time. In the present instance, for example, a statement from the Ten would say that "It is the intention of Her Majesty's government to re-fix the value of the pound at a time during the month of October when the government and the Bank of England, in consultation with Britain's partners, shall decide that the sterling exchange rate has reached a more realistic level. The pound will then rejoin economic and monetary union at its new parity."

Germany and most of its partners would welcome such an idea. France could be persuaded, once it was shown that the occasional absence of one or more currencies from the (agreement) for a month or two every couple of years would not wreck the farm price system (as the far worse experience of last year clearly showed it would not)indeed, would protect it better than having Europe teeter on the brink of crisis every time a currency gets out of line.

Pompidou's Choice

The list of Pierre Messmer's cabinet confirms the impression given by hie appointment as prime minister. There can be no doubt that the choice of ministers was essentially President Pompidou'e and it shows that his intention in appointing a new prime minister was not to initiate any major political change. It was to give the existing government a new look before the general election while reasserting its specifically Gaullist content.

For Britain it is on the whole a matter for rejoicing that portfolios most concerned with European and foreign affairs have not changed hands. Britain has had better relations with the Chaban-Delmas government than with any of its Fifth Republic predecessors, and Mr. Schumann in particular has identified himself with the Franco-British rapprochement.

No one earthshaking event has brought about this universal reappraisal. It is a combination of factors that have jarred the Swedes as they consciously try to project into the decades ahead.

One is the approaching end of a political era. During the nearly 50 years the Social Democrats have governed here, they have scored a fantastic achievement, built on the brains and productivity of Swedish labor. But now the welfare state is hard put to keep its chin above water.

Public opinion polls show a growing dissatisfaction with the Social Democrats. They now run a minority government, dependent upon either the Communists or the conservative coalition tostay

Societal customs are breaking down The tax structure not only encourages unemployment, it also discourages marriage in many cases, and both the marriage and hirth rate are declining. "Of-ficial" marriages are down 20 percent in recent years.

The population is shifting south, off the farms, into enormous new concrete ghettos. Sweden, now in the late-capitalist phase of development, may be on its way to becoming the first post-industrial society.

The material basis is there.

"We are richer then you [the United States | are maintains sociologist Gunnar Myrdal, with a view to the per capita income "Your gross national product includes Vietnam, moon flights, and your national debt," he says. "Subtract all this and we are Yet one of the grawing doubts here is about just such statistical measuring of values. The Swedes are proud of their welfare system, but the elaborate structure they have built is, like everything else, a victim of a cost of living explosion. More than balf the GNP now

Small and medium-size businesses, particularly in the engineering industry, are being forced out. The industrial labor force is declining by about 10,000 jobs a year in a total of one million.

Passed the Point

"We have passed the point of unlimited growth," says Electrolux's Werthen:

In some countries, this would be seen as cause for unmitigated gloom. Not so in Sweden, where even the prospect of zero industrial growth has advocates as well as opponents.

LONDON.—Enoch Powell has most ever since, when he recently turned 60 a fact which itself comes as something of a surprise, for he certainly shows no physical signs of his age, and indeed has the vigor of a man many y-ars younger and the schedule of a man many, many years younger still. But 60 is, considered in the abstract, nowadays a great age for a politician and it seems a good moment to take stock of him. And taking stock of Enoch Powell means reighing up what surprises he may yet have in store, since his measurable achievements have been virtually nonexistent so far. No doubt if he faced that point he would reflect that if Winston Churchill had died before 1940 he, too, would be achieved nothing, and that the rowell has another five years for go before he is even as pears in go before no so consider the control old sa Churchill was when he became Britain's leader in World

Powell's career has been a strange one. Early brilliance as a classical scholar led to his appointment as professor of Greek an Australian university at the amazing age of 25. Then came the war, in which he rose to the rank of brigadier, and after-wards decided not to pursue his academic career but to go into Conservative politics, in the wake of the postwar Labor party victory. After a spell as a backroom party strategist, he entered Parliament in 1950 for an industrial Midlands constituency at Wolverhampton, which he has represented ever since.

Steady Progress

Thereafter, he made steady but unspectacular political progress through junior inhisterial office to more senior, becoming Minister of Health in 1960, and remaining in that office, without doing or saying anything in any way special, until the fall of Harold Macmillan in 1963, It was then that he had the first glimpse of the lurid limelight that has played about him al-

George McGovern is so close winning that my own guess is still for a narrow victory on the credentials fights and then nomination on the first ballot. But even if that happens, he will need Kennedy. For more than any other Democrat in the country, Kennedy is able to deal with both the new forces in the party and the old party of Dick Daley and George Meany. He will have to help put it back together—possibly beginning with appearance here in Miami if and when McGovern makes it. Seeing Kennedy'e role in those terms makes clear that what is going on here is of just a parliamany tangle or another quadrennial test of personal ambition. George McGovern has no antipathy to the professionals himself, he was trained in the school of organization. But in his campaign for the presidential nomination he owes nearly everything to the young and the new Democrats. The old ones know that and genuinely fear what his nemination could mean. The struggle here is for the soul of the Democratic party.

SPAIN. Avant-Garde

Music at a New Festival

By Paul Moor DAMPLONA, Spain (IHT).

Spain's new, privately organized and financed avant-gards festival, the Encounters in Pamplona, got off to a start with an unscheduled bang. The morning of the opening concert, a bomb set by Basque separatists blew up the monument to Sanjurio, one of the Falance's three leading generals during the Spanish civil war. Three days later another bomb exploded in a car parked in front of Pamplona's army headquarters. Quite number of foreigners had come to the Encounters and even more would come for the Festival of San Fermin the following week. The Basque separatists obviously wanted everyone to know how

Aside from a few mishaps of the sort that plague all such new ventures, Encounters brought much credit to Luis de Pablo "the the sculptor, who head Madrid's Alea Group which conceived and organized Encounters, to the administrations of Pamplons and the province of Navarra, which sponsored them, and to the Huarte family who financed the festival. Three Huarte brothers and a sister were so generous that all the events, some of them costly indeed, were free of charge.

A predominantly young and demonstrative audience responded overwhelmingly. A number of locales had to be hurriedly chang-ed when instead of the 500 expected some 3,000 appeared at concerts during the festival, which ended early this month

The world premiere of an audio-visual work by Luc Ferrari and Jean Serge Breton entitled "Hello, This Is the Earth Calling" took place in the gaping expanse of a jai alai court. Whie numerous projectors showed slides of landscape and other motifs, Ferrari's electronic and instrumental score provided not much more than an interval of a perfect fifth which didn't stop for an hour and a quarter. By that time the uninhibited audience had long since taken over the stage.

This audience brought an almost awed obeisance, though, to a program of the latest works by John Cage and by David Tudor, which the two performed individually but simultaneously and for more than two uninterrupted hours on an eight-channel electronic system of frightening volume poten-tial. Curiously, no one involved thought to provide the titles of the works with which they favor-

Three festival events-concerts of traditional Iranian and Viet-namese music and a glorious program of choral works by Tomás Luis de Victoria superbly sung by the Origon Pamplones had nothing really to do with the avantgarde but lent Encounters extra distinction. One event anticipated as a high point, a program of works by Sylvano Bussotti, failed to materialize when the Pamplona censor declined to pass a film involved in it which he felt presected homophilia in too enthusiastic a fashion.

The organizers and backers hope acd plan to make Pamplona's Encounters a biennial event. If the new festival fulfills its promise, it can take its place alongside Donaueschingen, Darmetadt, Warsaw, and Royan as one of the most vital showplaces of the musical avant-garde.

NEWPORT IN NEW YORK

Newcomers, Survivors and Yankee Stadium

By Leonard Feather

NEW YORK-Much of the pro-and-conning at the Newport Jazz Festival as it went into the home stretch was centered on a quintet known as Weather Report.

Before a near-capacity house at Carnegie Hall, on Friday afternoon, this international group, co-led by the Viennese planist Joe Zawinul and the American saxophonist Wayne Shorter, plunged into action with an overwhelming surge of electronic vitality.

The music is loud, tense and sometimes overbearing, but thanks to the furious pulsation of the Czech bassist Miroslav Vitous and the resolute drumming of Eric Gravatt, the jazz essence is never long out of ear-shot. The fifth man, Dom Um Romao from Brazil, added a kaleidoscope of patterns and tones with his percussion grab

Weather Report reflects a strong mutual feeling for shifts mood, modes, colors, dynamics and rhythms—in contrast with the sound and fury merchants of jazz/rock as presented the previous night by the John Mc-Leughlin (Mahavishno) quintet; This Mahavishnu group ended a program that saw Oscar Peter-son make his Carnegie Hall debut as a solo pianist. Even his opening number, "Mack the Knife," provided immediate proof of Peterson's boundless virtuosity. Within a chorus or so he had transformed this schlock-melody into a whirling master

Peterson's technique is so formidable that his occasional tendency to sweep down the keyboard in meaningless glissandos is all thet needs to be edited. His solo concertizing is sure to establish him firmly as high man on the Tatum pole

The next day, the persuasive Weather Report, for which the audience offered what may have been the week's 57th standing ovation, struck the keynote for a generally avant-garde afternoon. also heard was a group called Lifetime, led by drummer Tony Williams and featuring a girl singer named Tequila. The sound system made it impossible to render judgment on the unfortunate Tequila mocking bird. Completing the show were saxophonist Archie Shepp, with a quintet, and the veteran bebop drummer Roy Haynes, whose group emphasized his ability to keep up with the times.

At the opposite end of the jazz spectrum, a program at Philharmonic Hall dipped deep into the wells of the past. The cultural marshals in bright red jackets carrying vivid red parasols, and before long there was a snakeline of New Orleans fans following them down the aisle. Sud-denly the antiseptic atmosphere of Philharmonic Hall gave way to the style and color of the band's home town.

Bob Greene, a white planist who has dedicated his life to a study of Jelly Roll Morton, offered a version of "Tiger Rag" (showing its origins as a French quadrille that Jelly himself might have envied). For what were supposed to be the festival's two climactic nights. George Weln booked two shows into the Yankee Stadium. He leaned on a predictable fermat:

The Royal Ballet's Students

By Oleg Kerensky

ONDON (IHT) .- It'e 13 years since the Royal Ballet School started giving an annual public matinee at Covent Garden. The first one, a performance of Coppélia," will always be rememas Antoinette Sibley's debut. Since then, these matinees have nearly always been exciting occasions and have often revealed outstandingly promising new

A few years ago the school started following the matines with a week of public performances in London's Holland Park and now the students also do a week in the charming old Richmond Theatre, on the outskirts of London. Last year there was a further innovation, when a few performances were given entire-ly by the pupils of the junior school, all under 15. This year the school has actually revived a ballet which was once a staple of the British repertoire but which has not been seen since

This ballet-"The Gods Go: a Begging"—was made by Dame. Ninette de Valois in 1936, when the Royal Ballet was called the Sadler's Wells Ballet and was still a small and relatively inexperlenced group. It is a slight but charming work, to music by Handel, not demanding any great technical virtuosity from the dancers and therefore ideally suited to students. The flimsy plot about a shepherd and a shepherdess dancing at an aris-tocratic country fete and then revealing themselves to be a god and goddess gives the dancers opportunities to be graceful, elegant and nimble. These opportunities are fully seized by the students. There are two alternating casts in the leading roles: I saw Elizabeth Alpe and Mark Silver who are both outstandingly attractive and likeable. They also both danced well; the boy, who is 17, looks as if he might one rival the lyrical fluency of Anthony Dowell and the stage personality of Christopher Gable.

I do not mean to suggest that technical virtuosity is beyond the students. Kim Reeder, who was already taken into the Royal Ballet three months ago, returned to the school to dence the dauntingly difficult virtuoso role of the Blue Skater in Ashton's "Les Patineurs." He managed it with more of the right-cheeky manner and more dazzling spins then many experienced professionals though he is not yet as exciting as the best interpreters. Elizabeth Alpe also appeared in "Les Patineurs," together with Jenni-fer Jackson, a Rhodesian girl who danced the heroine in the Covent Garden matinee of "La Fille Mal Gardee." Both of them have strong techniques and Jackson will be joining the Royal Ballet

Her achievement in dancing "Fille" is all the more remarkable if one remembers that 12 years ago, when Ashton created the ballet, we all doubted if anyone but the technically brilliant Nadia Nerina would ever be able to

Navy Gives $728-Million Contracts

McDonnell Douglas Corp. has received $728.4 million in U.S. Navy contracts, including $706.9 million for Parious models of the F4 aircraft and $21.5 million for continued development of the Harpoon subship cruise missile. The U.S. Air Force has awarded Boeing Co. a $66.5 million contract to begin development of a new stra-tegic decoy missile for the B-1 bomber, Lockheed Aircraft had been competing with Bosing for the missile award, which will cover about four years' development work. The Air Force also selected Litton System Inc., for development of the missiles guidance package and Philo-Ford Carp. for its decoy electronic system. The Litton contract is for $51 million and Phileo

Ford's is worth $14.2 million. The contract's eventual value is estimated at about $100 million. However, the award would lead to a production contract estimated at more than five times that amount, sources said.

The inevitability of the next crisis seems as obvious to the Swiss as the limited efficacy of exchange controls. We're on the merry road to hell, where one restrictionist control leads to another," - exclaims a banker.

"We'll end up enmeshed in a maze of controls and the politiciens will call it European unity." If the dollar glut lasts long enough the West will split into two monetary blocs on each aide The TUC is due to consider Mr. CRI delegates told Mr. Heath of the Atlantic. In other words, they favor voluntary coopera-tion to statutory control in re-ducing inflation. However, the we'll be back in the Middle Ages. It's fronic to think that this is being forced on reluctant Europe CBI did not commit itself on the an capitalism by the United time its policy of voluntarily keeping price increases within a

Curiously, this dismal outlook evokes less alarm and despondency from the portfolio managers than did last year's monetary storms. One reason is that investors have concluded, perhaps too hastily, that monetary upsets have scant impact on world trade. Another is that all the Western economies today are in better shape than a year ago, when recession loomed in West-ery was still in doubt. A third factor is that, in the eyes of the bankers, each new crisis demonstrates the futility of stopgaps and therefore brings nearer the day when convertibility will be restored on the basis of dearer gold and consolidated dollar balances.

Confidence in that ultimate outcome has evident investment implications. For one thing, it leads Swiss bankers to avoid Burodollar bonds and to prefer debts labelled in DM and French francs. On the other hand, it does not inspire them to recommend clients to buy gold, because there is no guarantee that the new official price will be much higher than current free market prices (plus the interest lost by holding bullion).

Similarly, the prospect of a new dollar devaluation within a year does not scare Swiss investors away from Wall Street. Recent experience has shown them that a currency loss can easily be covered by capital gains if one picks the right stock.

Schmidt Pledges Market Economy

E. N. July 10 (AP).—West Germany's new Economics and Finance Minister today pledged to follow the same free market line as predecessor Karl Schiller, whose resignation last week triggered a shuffle in Chancellor

Willy Brandt's cabinet. Helmut Schmidt, who dropped the Detense Ministry to take over Mr. Schiller's twin portfolios, said in his first public statement since assuming his new duties that there will be no change and no depar-ture from Mr. Schiller's concept of a "free economic order based on competition."

Indicated earnings for the second quarter were $27.5 million, or $1.51 a share, compared with $22.3 million, or $1.21 a share, in the year-earlier period.

Another New York bank parent, Manufacturers Hanover Corp., said Friday its operating earnings fell 7.7 percent, to $1.28 a share, from $1.29 a share last year. Du Pont's first-quarter net income this year was almost 34 percent shead of a particularly depressed 1971 first quarter. which helps to explain why the chemical company's first-half net income was about 20 percent ahead of last year's $167 millioo. or $3.42 a share, Mr. McCoy said. Curtiss-Wright Halted; Wang Drops 11 Points

By Vartanig G. Vartan NEW YORK, July 10 (NYT). - New York Stock Exchange prices, continuing their recent choppy pattern, were jolted today by large losses in individual issues. To Wall Street watchers. this was a sure sign of general investor wariness amid the uncertainties of economics, politics and Vietnam.

Wang Laboratories plunged 11 to 48 1/2 in active trading, as investors got their first chance to react to a company disclosure made after the market closed last Friday.

Officials said they expected profits for both the June quarter and for the 1972 fiscal year ending last month to show declines from comparable 1971 results. Wang, the market's biggest per-centage loser today, makes desk calculators and other electronic equipment. Its stock was a big market winner in late 1969, but tumbled sharply in the first half of 1970.

If you reach a hopeless con-tract, as Robert Sheehan of London did on the diagramed deal from the recent World Team Olympiad, there is no point in regretting your bidding, criticizing your partner, or bemoaning the fates. Instead you should attempt to make the contract, remembering that the opponents too can make mistakes.

Playing against Belgium, Shee-han opened the bidding with one spade and took a venturesome plunge into game when his partner raised to two spades. It was apparently a hopeless contract because of the duplication of distribution in the minor suits. West led a low trump and South won with the ten. He could see one faint chance if the opponents would cooperate. At the second trick South made the unusual move of leading the heart deoce from his hand. West played low, and dummy's jack was taken by the queen. East was not inclined to shift to diamonds, a play which was very likely to present South with a trick if he held the acc.

West should have worked out that cashing the diamond ace was unlikely to give the declarer any significant help. But South deserves credit for concealing the

In "The Taxi" she takes a vacation from literary exhibitionism to tell a marvelous fairy tale of incest and sexual initiation. The story is cast in the form of a dialogue between brother and sister in the back seat of a taxi-cab which they have transformed into a bower of love. The girl has embroidered curtains for the windows. The seat is covered by a mattress Beside them sits a hamper of iced champagne, along with pate asd truffles. All day they talk to each other, as only the French can, ecstatically, elegiacly, tender-ly, while they make love like two-dryads in a tale by Ovid.

If we can get; them in e quagmire, we can win the war."

LONDON, July 10 (UPI).-A London dealer has paid a world record price of £257,250 (about $643.125) for a 14th - century Italian painting auctioned at Christie's.

The polyptych was put up for sale by Rudolf, Graf Czernin, of Germany. It had been in the Czernin family since 1846.

"But it could rain on Russian ships and Chinese advisers in Vietnam."

"We are using Smart rain bombs," Orlando countered. "They are programmed to hit only military targets. We have a laser beam that seros in on a target, and then the rain is relessed. It's possible that an occasional civilian can be hit by the rain, but we are doing everything to see that no civilian gets wet."

"There is something wrong about this, Orlando," I said. "It seems to me that making rain in a war is a very serious thing."

"Wouldn't you have us drop rain on the enemy rather than bombs?" he asked.

"But you've been dropping both bombs and rain," I protested. "Next question," Orlando said angrily.

Three War Games: Chess, Bridge and Go

DARIS (IHT).-The assertion that world chess champion Borls Spassky might be thrown off his game by the hassle which accompanied the harried efforts to stage a championship match between him and American Bobby Fischer at Reykjavík is not simply a gratuitous ploy in the prematch sparring, nor does it signify that Spassky is particularly fragile. The psychological factor is of tremendous importance in chess, a game which demands the utmost concentration; a champion raging inwardly at the disconcerting antics of a challenger might easily be beaten for that reason.

Chess may seem to the outsider to be a sport of gentlemen, who would disdain to take undue advantage, psychological or otherwise and, indeed, one which offers little opportunity to do so. But at the championship level, where the future livelihood of the contestants may depend upon whether they win or lose, this is not the case. Some 30 or 35 years ago, grandmaster Edward Lasker wrote a book called "Chess for Fun and Chess for Blood," in which he set forth the theory that chess as played between amateurs for their intellectual pleasure, often as great whether one wins or loses, and chess as played between professionals whose overriding objective is to win, beautifully or not, are two different games. Lasker told of various devices employed by champions in tense matches to throw the opponent off balance psychologically—usually, like the game it-self, extremely subtle ones, for instance, distracting an opponent suffering from time pressure, for in championship chess, as everyone knows, a certain number of moves must be made within a fixed time

Gentlemen

Edward Lasker may have been particularly alert to dubious psychological tactics in chess because he was too great a gentle-man to use them himself—which could have been one of the reasons why, unlike his homonym, Emmanuel Lasker, he never won the world championship ("Nice guys don't win," as a specialist on the subject put it). Once, in an idle moment, I made a list of the very few persons I have met in a long journalistic career who had imsed me first of all by their gentlemanliness, and Edward Lasker was on it—along with Anthony Eden, Lord Halifax, Lord Louis Mountbatten, the prewar purser of the Normandie (Villard, I think his name was) and a Sicilian peasant on whose farm I was once a hunch guest, I may have been prejudiced in favor of Lasker because he was the only grand master with whom I have ever played to a draw—or at least he said I had. This assertion was at the same time a sample of his gentlemanliness and his sly sense of humor. He knew when he pushed back his chair from the board and announced in a loud voice, "I concede you a draw," that he was going to electrify the (chess-playing) boys in the back room.

I did not really get a draw with Lasker. It was just taking him longer than he hadexpected to beat me, and he was already half an hour late for dinner. We had worked our way down to rooks and pawns, of which he had two more than I; even without this advantage, it was a foregone conclusion that he would win. I should have quit playing chess then and there and lived on the reputation this gave me with Lasker's goggle-eyed admirers. Unfortunately I returned to playing at the bar with the Filipino barman, who was accustomed to wiping up the floor with me while simultaneously handling a busy

Lesker also wrote a book on various board games whose title threw into relief one facet of chess which seems to be in evidence at Reykjavik-"Kriegspielen." war games. Chess is taught at West Point because it encourages strategic thinking. World War II was fought, if you want to look at it through the wrong end of a very large telescope, between chess strategists and go strategists. Go is the Japanese strategic game, taught to army and navy officers. I learned to play it at Chumley's, in Greenwich Village, so far as I know the only place in New York where it was played in the 1940s. Chum-ley's was not only the downtown Bleek's, thet is to say, the hangout of journalists and writers, but it was also the rendezvous of chess, go and bridge players, where Lasker was the uncontested king.

My dabblings with go at Chumley's once gave me material for a newspaper column. Every so often, when one of the Japanese waiters who had introduced the game to Chumley's, took up a station behind my back to watch the play, I would make a move and immediately sense a wave of disapproval from the onlooker. Whenever I asked, "What did I do wrong?" the answer was always the same, "It wasn't necessary." When the fear was being expressed in the American press that the Japanese might attack Australia, I wrote a piece invoking the game of go, ending with the opinion that the Jepanese would not move against Australia because it wasn't necessary. They did not, but I will not argue that it was necessarily because of go psychology,

To those who might argue that the result of the war in the Pacific proved the superiority of chess over go, it could be answered that chess players of Lasker's eminence turned to go when they began to find chess too simple, and more pertinently that the American "island bop-ping" strategy wasn't chess, it was go-in go you try to occupy islands of territory all over the board, protected so that the enemy can't invade them. Possibly the Japanese felt that in using go psychology against them, what the Americans were doing not only was not chess, it was also not cricket

Go, alas, is a dying game, perhaps already a dead one. The lack of leisure in our times has killed it. It takes much longer to play a game of go than a game of chess, and nobody has that much time any more. Before the war, a big go championship game in Japan was so important that newspapers hung building-sized diagrams of the board on their facades, and followed the game move by move as it was played for the benefit of the crowds in the street. After the war, when I tried to find a go player among Japanese newspaper friends (all young), I encountered no one who had even heard of it. It took me about three years to find out where I could get a go board and pieces (in New York) but I have still found no one to play the game

Bridge is a war game too, as the champions play it. (Lasker, as a specialist in war games, probably the mildest mannered man ever to concentrate on such figuratively sanguinary contests, was a first-rate bridge player as well as a chess master). The champions in bridge also play for blood, and their explotts, as recorded bridge journalists, have little relation to the bridge played for fun as you (I suppose)

Opening Bid

It was again at Chumley's thet I played one hand which may have come close to being unique; at least when I made the opening bid, eliciting a forced response from my partner, Warren Moscow, of The New York Times, banged his beer down on the bar exclaiming, "My God! I never heard that answer to that bid before!" and came over to see what I had. It was only then that I realized myself how extraordinary that pair of bids was; indeed the response was ordinarily so useless that nowadays it means something quite different-perhaps this was the only time it

I had opened the bidding with four no trump (Blackwood, then in its infancy, asking how many aces my partner held, with the intention of going to slam. My partner answered five spades, and I therefore bid the grand slam in no triumps. What had startled Warren Moscow was that I must have called for a slam without bolding a single ace myself, for my partner's answer showed that he held all four (nowadays five spades shows none). But I held the most extraordinary hand of my life:

C' KQJ10987 If my partner had been without a single ace, his bid would have been five clubs; it was a laydown. So much for war games, of which chess at Reykjavik seemed for a moment at the point-of genuine hostilities,

This year Soldwedel bought a small rubber snake—the kind loved by kids and practical jokers -and tied it in a macadamia tree. "The first squirrel took one look at it, stopped suddenly and changed his mind about the nuts. More snakes in more trees resulted in "three gallons of maca-damias," said the bappy Soldwedel, whose method received favorable comment from the county agricultural department.
